Some three months since an auspicious wind blew fortune her way in the manly form of Wendell Phillips Hamilton. He was a native of Washington, D. C., of an unripe cinnamon complexion, and had been a gentleman's John Thomas as well as a tonsorial artist. His nose was not amiss, his face was well enough, and his mouth was better than a gash in a billock of flesh. He was very well misinformed, and possessed the manners of a Chesterfield. He wore a yellow watch and chain, three yellow and two white rings, a diamond solitaire, large es a robin's egg, and unexceptional sartorial appointments, that seemed to have their origin in the Bowery.
